Haitian coup puts military back on top

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Troops loyal to Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy stormed the national palace and deposed President Benoit M. Namphy in a gun and grenade battle that raged into early today.

NAMPHY NAMPHAT

The coup ended four months of civilian government and put Namphy back in command of the nation. He left for two days as head of a three-man junta. It came less than a week after a Manigat fired Namphy and tried to reorganize the military.

An armored personnel carrier sat on the lawn outside the national palace today. There were more troops than normal on patrol inside the high wrought iron gates, but otherwise things appeared normal from the outside.

AT 6:30 A.M., the number of soldiers patrolling streets was not unusually high. There were fewer cars and people than normal.

The army will lead the country this way, he declared, waving an anti-submachine gun and flanked by helmeted soldiers.

The fate of Manigat, who was seized at his residence five miles north and his chief military ally, Lt. Col. Jean-Claude Paul, was not known. There was no official word on casualties.

Haitian journalists close to the military said troops loyal to Manigat were killed when soldiers backed by three tanks freed Namphy from house arrest and then stormed the palace. Namphy had been held at his residence in Bon Repos 15 miles north of the capital.

Alden Rivers, Champaign's first black police officer, shows a picture from when he joined the force in 1935. He retired in 1960 but keeps busy at his job at a local bank.

Jobs in 'Germantown' led to segregated 'Negro' area

By CHERYL THOMPSON
News-Gazette Staff Writer

In the 1930s, Champaign police called it the "triangle."

Now it's called the North End. The name has changed, but Champaign's northeast side is still known as the black community — more than 50 years later.

It wasn't always the black neighborhood, said Alden Rivers, who moved to Champaign-Urbana in 1919 at the age of 17 and became Champaign's first black police officer in 1935.

In the first quarter of the century, the northeast side was heavily populated with German residents. Few blacks lived there, Rivers said. Most lived in north Urbana or just west of the University of Illinois.

"When I first moved here, only two black families lived from First Street to Wright Street," Rivers recalled. "Champaign-Urbana sure has come a long way."

Sarah Scott, 95, agreed. "When I came here in 1911, there was a lot of segregation in housing," said Scott, who moved to Champaign-Urbana from Shawneetown, Ill. in southeastern Illinois.

DURING THE EARLY 1930s, though, the Illinois Central Railroad offered employment to blacks, attracting people hoping for opportunities in Arkansas and Mississippi.

Wanting to live near their jobs, blacks slowly migrated to "Germantown," Rivers said. Eventually, the German residents scattered around Champaign-Urbana. They sold their property to real estate agencies. The houses in the North End were then sold to blacks.

The majority of the Negroes lived in the northern part ... wrote Janet Andrews Cromwell, a UI student who authored a thesis on "The History and Organization of the Negro Community in Champaign-Urbana, Ill." in 1934.

Cromwell, now deceased, described what it was like for blacks in northern Champaign more than half a century ago. A survey she conducted revealed that out of 50 black men, eight had professional jobs. Professional jobs were defined as doctors, ministers, teachers, musicians and funeral directors.

Senator: Investigation overdue

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Republican senator is releasing evidence to back up his contention that the Reagan Justice Department stifled allegations three years ago that defense contractors and private consultants were illegally obtaining Pentagon weapons secrets.

Sen. Charles Grassley says the massive Pentagon bribery investigation now under way could have started much earlier during the Reagan administration.

The Iowa Republican said he planned today to read into the Congressional Record testimony that was blocked by the Justice Department in 1983 from being delivered to a subcommittee he chaired.

The October 1985 testimony alleged that private consultants were regularly receiving classified details about U.S. weapons systems, Grassley said in an interview Sunday with The Associated Press.

The Justice Department could have pursued this aggressively more than three years ago but they didn't, he said.

The 2-year-old probe has focused chiefly on Navy weapons-buying. It became public last week when FBI and Naval Investigative Service agents conducted coast-to-coast raids on the offices of past and present Pentagon officials, private consultants and contractors.

U.S. Attorney Henry Hudson said privately that as many as 300 indictments could be expected out of the investigation, a government source said Sunday.

In October 1985 Grassley was chairman of the Senate Judiciary administrative practices subcommittee, a panel which he used to examine defense procurement practices. Grassley is a frequent critic of what he calls widespread waste and abuse in Pentagon spending.

Grassley said Justice Department officials blocked the testimony of Robert Segal, a Defense Department investigator who was the Pentagon's liaison with the Justice Department's Defense Procurement Fraud Unit. The DPFU was a special Justice Department office set up to investigate waste in the military budget.

It was well known in the Justice Department that some elements of the Pentagon and the Justice Department held DPFU in low esteem and there is speculation that when the current allegations first came to light the matter was steered away from the agency and into Hudson's Defense

Warrant seeks papers about rival's jet bids

WASHINGTON (AP) — Investigators in the Pentagon bribery probe are seeking documents concerning Pratt & Whitney's use of a pair of defense consultants to help-win contracts for two major jet engine programs.

A search warrant seeking documents from Pratt & Whitney says the company may have written its bids on the contracts with secret knowledge about what its chief competitor was proposing to the government.

The warrant, obtained by the trade paper Defense Week and made available to The Associated Press, was signed last week by U.S. District Judge John H. Pratt.

The four-page warrant permitted the FBI to search the office of Eugene Tallis, vice president of Pratt & Whitney and head of the company's Washington office. Pratt & Whitney is a subsidiary of United Technologies, the nation's eighth-largest defense contractor. The parent company has declined to comment other than to say it is cooperating with the investigation.

RKW hired Mervyn Paisley within a week after Paisley resigned in April 1987 as assistant Navy secretary for research, engineering and systems. The company also hired William Galvin, another consultant closely associated with Paisley.

The search warrant seeks documents, notes, reports and other materials that Paisley and Galvin provided to Tallis.

Despite safety farmers can't control

Dennis Riggs says farm level in the well at his farm was so low. But his well won't get the water it needs until the spring when the water they need. And neither Riggs nor the rest of the farmers in Illinois have much to say about when that will happen.

The one thing we still have no control over is Mother Nature, said Riggs who also serves as the nutrition director for the Champaign County Farm Bureau.

There's a lot of science and technology, but it still comes down to sunlight and rain to make crops grow. And we've only got half of that, he said.

But other people may be feeling this way, said Jim Dey, a farmer who lives on a farm north of St. Joseph, Mo. that he's been through hard times before and survived. And they would survive too.

There MAY NOT be panic in the farmers' hearts, but they are literally praying for rain. Twice last week at the St. Joseph Church of Christ and later at a farm near the field, area farmers gathered to call on the Lord for relief for their crops.

Jim Dey is the assistant city editor at The News-Gazette. His column appears on Saturdays and Mondays.

Arrest made for sexual assault

A Champaign man was being held in the county jail this morning awaiting a court appearance after he was arrested for sexually assaulting a woman.

James Ross Jr., 30, of 18 Blue Spruce Drive, C. was arrested at 1105 N. Fifth St. C. shortly after 4:15 a.m. Sunday for allegedly committing sexual assault.

The victim — a 45-year-old Champaign resident — told police she was walking in the 700 block of North Champaign at 1:30 a.m. Saturday when she was assaulted by Ross.

Packets suspected to be cocaine

Two Chicago men returned in custody in the Champaign County jail following an arrest early Monday morning for suspected drug dealing.

Stewart Holden Jr. 30, and James E. Stepien 29, faced a Monday afternoon arraignment in Champaign after an officer spotted the suspects carrying a front license plate according to a police report.

A routine check by a police officer backed a valid driver's license and Stepien had an outstanding warrant for failure to appear in court, the report stated.

Police confiscated from the car a knife and several packets of a white powder substance suspected to be cocaine.

Information sought on home invasion

By The News-Gazette Staff Writer

Information about a recent Urbana home invasion is being sought by Crimestoppers.

Pot scheme nets fine, probation for ex-cops

By JULIE WURTH
News-Gazette Staff Writer

WATSEKA — A former Champaign police officer convicted of marijuana charges won't spend any time in jail.

Former petroleum Jeffrey Alisp and former Champaign police officer Michael Bolding were sentenced today by Judge Blank as they were sentenced to four years probation and fined $1,000 each for their roles in a marijuana growing operation near Onaga. Neither man received any jail time as a condition of probation.

Current Judge James Blank also ordered the two men to perform 320 hours of community service work during the next four years.

Alisp, Bolding and Onaga farmer Curt Ahlden, who was sentenced earlier in the case, also will be responsible for paying a $500,000 judgment based on the street value of about 1,000 pounds of marijuana police seized.

Last week Ahlden was sentenced to four years probation and a $10,000 fine. A fourth man, George DuBach, a tavern owner in Onaga, faces an August trial in the case.

Iroquois County State's Attorney Tony Brasel who recommended 5-year prison terms for Alisp and Bolding, was critical of the probation sentences ordered today by Judge Blank as they were several police officers involved in the investigation.

Watsela Police Chief Michael Van Hoven said the probation sentence "certainly leaves you with a hollow feeling." Van Hoven testified last week that he was a former friend of both Bolding and Alisp and recommended they be sentenced to prison.

In heading down the probation sentences, the judge said the two police officers had committed their crimes as private citizens, not as police officers.

"I cannot find any evidence that they used their office to further their offenses," Blank said. He said they were unlikely to become in contact with each other.

NOBLE FIND

Champaign's northeast side, also called the North End, is an area of poverty, unemployment, substandard housing and a growing drug trade. It has little business.

But the North End also is a neighborhood with promise — with a substantial commitment of government money and a growing number of leaders concerned about its future.

Tuesday: What the future holds for the North End.

Cromwell also examined housing conditions and found the area to be "run-down" and "lacking the physical beauty of other parts of Champaign."

"IN THE SO-CALLED Negro community, these residences ... are frame dwellings and in most instances, they are placed on small lots and are thus crowded on the block," Cromwell wrote. "The observer ... would at once notice the drab and unkempt appearances of the structures."

Occasionally, he might notice a house that has been painted or repaired, but that is quite rare, she continued. "In this northern section, one sees a number of small, weather-beaten, shack-like structures ... one sees many houses with glass missing from doors and windows."

She recalled that there was no "defined" black business area, except "several" grocery stores and barber shops on First, Fifth and Poplar streets.

There were two black hotels and several insurance companies on the North End, Cromwell wrote. There was one black doctor. A black dentist from Danville commuted to Champaign every Sunday.

Before 1929, blacks supported a dentist, but when the railroad shops reduced their forces, the people's wages were reduced or stopped and they were unable to pay their bills," Cromwell said.

There were even a couple of black businesses that were profitable, Cromwell said. The "red-light district of First and Poplar streets offered gambling, after-hours drinking and prostitution. The houses and banks along Poplar Street have since been torn down, and many of the once-popular drinking establishments on First Street have closed.

Of 50 black women surveyed, none had a professional job, three worked in skilled jobs, 12 worked unskilled jobs, and 32 did not
