America elected its first person of color to the office of Presidency on Nov. 4, 2008. This election rightly signifies a breakdown of some racial barriers; however, many Americans inaccurately believe that racism no longer exists in the Country. Forms of discrimination, more subtle than in the past, continue. These inconspicuous forms of discrimination are often termed micro-aggressions. Presenters will discuss how micro-aggressions demean, exclude and invalidate people of color, and the implications for the Champaign Community.
