IMSS donates to Project C.U.R.E. on November 25th, 2009

Operating as a non-profit organization, Project C.U.R.E. accepts donations of new and used medical supplies and equipment. Partnering with various organizations in over 120 counties, Project C.U.R.E helps meet the imperative health needs of the world by delivering donated medical supplies to developing countries. Customizing each shipment, areas receive medical supplies and equipment specific to the need of that community.

IMSS has two machines that test Hemoglobin A1c levels which are currently not being used. The donation of a newer machine model by Dr. Chittaranjan V. Reddy has retired the use of these two machines. IMSS, under Dr. Reddy's name, has decided to donate the two Hemoglobin A1c analyzers to Project C.U.R.E. to help its efforts in providing adequate medical care to areas all around the world. Project C.U.R.E. is grateful for the donation and says there are many developing countries currently requesting these machines at this time.
