

A large, diverse crowd of people, including men, women, and children of various ethnicities, are gathered outdoors. They are holding a large American flag that spans across the middle of the image. The crowd is smiling and looking towards the camera. Some people are holding small signs with numbers like '122', '22', '48', '97', and '238'. One person in the foreground is wearing a Viking costume with a horned helmet and a white beard. Another person is wearing a black and white outfit that looks like a nun's habit. The background shows more people and some greenery, suggesting an outdoor event or festival.

Regina Samelson's Story : Sixty Years Ago

Submitted by skokienet on Saturday, September 23, 2006 - 4:05pm in History & Genealogy

It is now more than half a century ago that I was liberated from Bergen-Belsen Concentration Camp. That day was April 15, 1945. Although that was so long ago, I remember everything as if it happened yesterday. I will not forget that day as long as I live.

I had just recovered from typhus fever which had weakened me, and I was only able to walk on all fours like an animal. I was indifferent, empty and numb. I felt guilty for surviving. Only my sister was with me. The rest of my family (my parents, three brothers, a sister, three sister-in-laws, and a nephew) were all killed in Treblinka.

A few weeks before my liberation, we constantly heard artillery but no one paid any attention to it. The hunger was unbearable. No food was given to us for days. Luckily, my sister met a girl who was working in the kitchen. She took pity on her and offered to give her some flour and water. It was more like sand, and the water looked like mud but there was no water in the camp. With that she made pancakes. This was a luxury and I helped a friend by giving her some for her dying child. I got up early the morning of April 15, 1945, in order to look for some paper for my sister who had diarrhea. All of a sudden, I saw people carrying bundles of clothes. The liberators opened the magazines and the half dead people with their last bit of might carried bundles of clothes. The same night my sister went into shock and screamed all night. The liberators gave us food but it was too rich for our stomachs. The liberators gave us food but it was too rich for our stomachs.

Bankruptcies and Foreclosures

Submitted by mbuhmann on Fri, 04/08/2011 - 4:57pm

In these difficult economic times there are many businesses or individuals going through bankruptcy or foreclosure. As a matter of protection it may be helpful to check on a client, customer or supplier who may be going through these financial difficulties. And though this information is a matter of public record it can still be difficult to locate.

Welcome to my site! Feel free to look around, make comments, or send me messages. I don't expect you to enjoy reading what I post as much as I enjoy posting. But I'll keep posting regardless!

I currently reside in Chicago. I am beginning to explore the field of art through ceramics and graphic design. However, I am also accomplished in Social Psychology research and Sociology. I work with high school students all day, so this is where I go to just be me!

I am an artist, creator, potter, designer, writer, thinker, and visionary. I am capable of changing the world, but so are you. This

Niles West defeats hate with peace at PeaceFest@West 2010

From: SkokieTalk | Sep 12, 2010 | 5,500 views

On the morning of September 8th, over a hundred students and community members lined up along Oakton Street cheering and celebrating the school's diversity. This peace demonstration was held in response to the WBC's protest in front of Niles West against beliefs—peace, diversity, tolerance—that the school and its student body take pride in. Watch this video and get a glimpse of the many voices that were a part of the PeaceFest@West. Enjoy!
