A Time To Belong

Maroon

Moments of memories make Maroon meaningful

This year's Maroon has undergone many changes. For the first time, the editorship was undertaken by a junior. The brain center was situated in room 105 where moans and groans, typewriter keys and Mrs. Kovar's distinctive voice were heard many hours into the night. The staff was for the most part made up of inexperienced editors and their assistants. We have made mistakes, but no one can say we haven't tried.

To find a place to work in room 105 is often hard, but Mrs. Kovar and Cindy Abbott solve the problem.

Room 105 is never without the commotion and confusion of staff members.

The night before a deadline presents a problem.

"Will the work ever end?" questions Cindy Abbott.

Editor-in-Chief Debbie Smith and Mrs. Kovar contemplate more problems.

Smoke and Parchment Club chooses classmates' creative compositions

The never ending efforts of CCHS students were displayed in the Smoke and Parchment literary magazine. The continuous flow of creative writings kept this club on their toes. Many hours of hard work went into reviewing every story, essay and poem that was submitted to the club. It was indeed an honor to have a piece of literature published by this active club.

Quill and Scroll Participants practice perfect penmanship

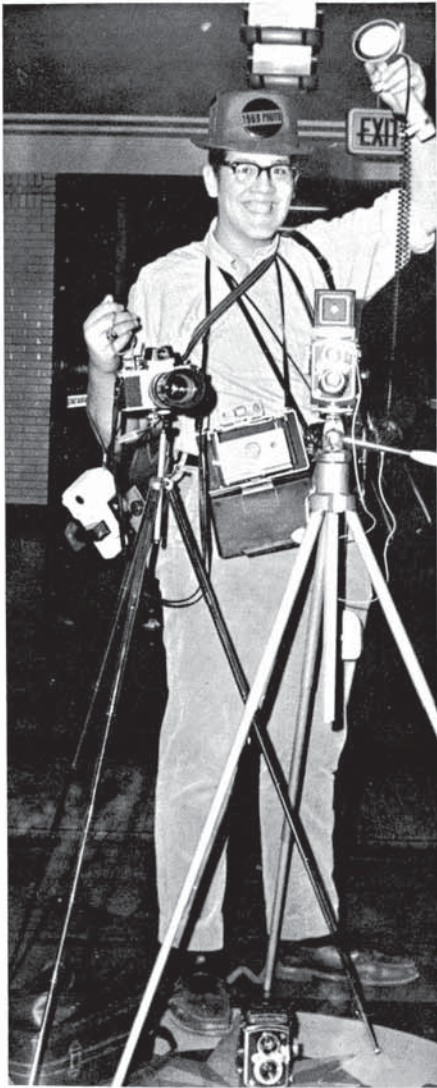

Those strange looking creatures roaming around the halls in a robe were this year's Quill and Scroll initiates. The members of this honorary club have spent many hours writing copy and making layouts so they can present the news to the school body. The club raised money by sponsoring a concession stand at the games to pay for initiation and banquet cost.

Chronicle

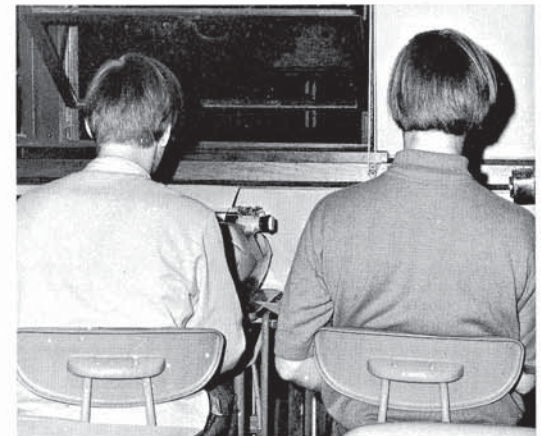

Paper publishes pupils' progress periodically

Many Monday nights during the year the Chronicle staff burned the midnight oil in 105. Story assignments covered the many and varied aspects of school life, making the paper interesting and informative for its readers. Each experienced staff member worked with the new sophomores to teach them the fundamentals of putting the paper together in the Chronicle tradition.

Canvas Board

Creative craftsmen communicate by colors

Here may be the Picassos of the future, or maybe the designers of the latest jewelry. These people are members of the honorary art club for painters, jewelry makers, and sculptors. The Canvas Board gives exceptional art students a chance to try more challenging art and increase their skills.

Office Occupation

Office Occupations offers opportunities

The members of Office Occupation are made up of seniors interested in learning more about their occupations. This year the nineteen member club took a field trip to Chicago to visit various office buildings, and sponsored a banquet for their employers. The club sent four of its members to the State Convention in Springfield. All members agreed that it was a profitable experience to belong to this club.

Making flowers for their annual banquet are Paula Schmittag, Diane Fox, and Pam Burnett.

Counseling Guides

Couriers call conferees

Hopeful faces always greeted the girls carrying the blue slips from the counseling office. The hope of a possible reprieve from class inspired these eager glances at the counseling guides. This year the guides had a new guidance director, Mrs. Garland, who kept them busy with many activities in room 104. They occupied their time by answering telephones, delivering passes and messages, and posting information about college entrance examinations and area colleges on the bulletin board. On occasion, they had time to do their homework. Being a counseling guide meant becoming better acquainted with the student body.

DECA

Organization offers outstanding opportunity

Those lucky few who were allowed to leave classes at 12:45 each day were the DECA workers from Central High School. These students took a vocational course in the morning and went to their training station jobs in the afternoon. They held jobs in the fields of retailing, marketing, and distributing; they also held jobs in merchandising.

These students went to the State Leadership Conference at Centennial where they participated in workshops, sales demonstrations, and job interviewing, before attending a banquet. From here they had the opportunity to attend the Illinois State Leadership Conference which is held in Peoria each year.

Volunteer Office Assistants Assistants act as aides

Volunteer Office Assistants aided the secretaries in the school office every hour. This volunteer group gave up a class period each day to work in the office. These girls picked up attendance cards from all of the classrooms, delivered telephone messages, put notices in teachers' mailboxes, and recorded absentees. When we had visitors in our school, these girls gladly gave directions and helpful information. To raise money this year, these hardworking members sponsored a concession stand at some of the home basketball games.

VICA Volunteers view vocations

VICA, Vocational Industrial Clubs of America, served all students interested in trade and industry to unite in a common bond. Selling candy was one of the club's projects this year. The profit helps pay for a field trip to Chicago. The many fields trips the club planned proved useful in learning the fundamentals of industry. Under the capable leadership of Parke Wetherford, the organization participated in a Vocational Education Week. The year closed successfully with an employer appreciation banquet.

Student Council Selected students serve school skillfully

Governing the affairs of the entire student body is no ordinary task. With the capable leadership of the executive board, the 1970 Student Council sustained its reputation as an enterprising club with varied activities, and experienced on a small scale the debates and legislative procedures of a democracy. Several members attended a District Student Council convention in Decatur, where Central's Gawaine Perkins was elected District Student Council Treasurer. The Council extended its activities outside the school by holding the January Jamboree, a party for underprivileged area children. At the same time Illinois was revising its State Constitution, Central's governing body liberalized its constitution in liaison with the House of Representatives. Although the Student Council did not succeed in generating enough interest in a student lounge, they were more fortunate in another concern. They were surprised at their own success this year in changing an age-old dress rule: Mr. Fleener accepted their proposal that girls be allowed to wear slacks to class. Obviously, many problems and questions arose to keep every member in Room 209 busy.

A typical business meeting in room 209 contains much dialogue.

House of Representatives

Representatives reform restrictions and rules

The House of Representatives met twice a month to give each student a direct voice in school government. Representatives from each sixth hour class took their classmates opinions, gripes and ideas to each meeting.

Under the leadership of Tom Dorsey and Bob Runyan, the House of Representatives worked on many projects such as printing the lunch menu and airing student grievances. The House led in the discussions on the projected student lounge, a cooperative effort with Student Council to poll student wishes.

Being speaker of the House, Tom Dorsey finds a troublesome job.

During a discussion, house members conquer the urge to take a nap.

FSA Tomorrow's typists are taught techniques today

The Future Secretaries Association provided experience for girls planning to hold a secretarial position. Girls were sent invitations to join the club if they maintained a B average in all their business courses and a C average overall. There was a prerequisite of having shorthand before belonging to the club. These girls held meetings in the school cafeteria the second Thursday of each month. Presiding over the meetings were president, Chris Cronau; secretary-treasurer, Debbie Day; with Mrs. Schoen as sponsor. There were speakers and refreshments at the meeting and often the meetings were replaced by activities such as a computer tour, a Christmas party, and a hayrack ride. Several girls were selected monthly to attend a dinner of the National Secretaries Association at the Ramada Inn. Polywogs and stationery were sold as money-raising projects.

Senior FSA members, Chris Cronau and Debbie Wynn, patiently wait for the computer tour to start on a freezing winter night.

FFA Foundation is fixed for future farmers

The Champaign FFA Chapter promoted production agriculture as well as processing distribution and services of an agricultural nature. Scholarship, leadership, and problem ability were developed, with individual and group action as a model.

The local program of work emphasized community service and cooperation, American heritage and safety. Each student was assigned to one or more committees to implement a total working program.

The Chapter actively participated in local, sectional, district and state contests, with projects such as land selection, public speaking, foundation awards, program of work, and agricultural mechanics.

FTA
Tentative teachers try
today for tomorrow

The Future Teachers of America once again raised $100 through taffy apple sales and bake sales and donated this gift to the Salvation Army. The club was then recognized by the Salvation Army with an award for their "unselfish service at Christmas." As a joint project with Key-Club members, helped the elderly at the Champaign County and American Nursing Homes with their Christmas parties. Advised by Mrs. Norton, three members of the club taught at several elementary schools. The experience was profitable and the year ended by awarding three seniors scholarships for their dedicated work in the club.

FNA
Association aids aches
and assists ailments

The participants of Future Nurses of America found activity periods to be a necessity for handling the week's business and planning out of school activities. To reach a better understanding of a nursing career and have fun while doing it was the purpose of these activities. With the help of sponsor Mrs. Ward, the organization took many field trips to hospitals around the state. The tours the girls took in Chicago, St. Louis, and Champaign hospitals helped them to get a better insight into the medical profession.

Band members, Gary Gaither, Ken McWhethy, Cliff Doak, and George Kelley, are ready to march on to Centennial field to perform.

Band Musical Maroons are masters at marching

The Marching Maroons led the spirit on the football field and in the stands to support their team. Under the leadership of Mr. Dunscomb and drum majorette Rhonda Parkhurst, the Maroons performed for the home football games and one away game. New musical cheers played from off the field seemed to help lead the team to victory.

The band continued to support school spirit as basketball season opened. Before each varsity game they played along with the cheers and for the enjoyment of the fans.

Rounding out its musical year the band gave concerts and went on concert tour to Nashville, Tennessee.

Jazz Band Trombone and trumpet try today's tempos

A new musical group, the Jazz Band, came to Champaign Central this year. They gave many fine performances to thrilled audiences. Under the direction of Mr. Dunscomb, who organized the band, they performed for an all-school assembly and the stunt show. Singers Barb Suggs, and Gawaine Perkins, enriched the meaning of many songs.

The Jazz Band took two exciting trips during the year. The first was to Oak Lawn, Illinois to play in a contest. They received the second place award for the entire contest and earned a superior rating. Less than a week later they went on the Band-Choir concert tour to Nashville.

Baton Club Maroon musicians meet for more music mastery

Baton Club opened its membership to all music students this year including sophomores, contrary to past policy. The new members escaped the embarrassment of the traditional initiation from the past years.

New ideas produced new plans for Baton Club members. Among these plans was to keep an up-to-date calendar of all music events in the community. Proceeds from money-making projects were used to finance summer music sessions for exceptional musicians.

Baton Club president, Joan Kulwin, finds meetings fun and humorous.

Choirs

Choirs contribute concerts and cheer

The Choral Department this year changed a tradition: instead of a fall concert and a Christmas Concert, they put all of their musical efforts into one excellent holiday sing. With fewer a cappella and choir members, more time was allowed for more challenging routines.

Fewer a cappella members meant more work for each in the turtle sales to support the cost of the concert tour. This year the Madrigals added the concert tour to their busy calendar of sing-outs. Plans for the tour to Tennessee included concerts at several schools and a stay in Nashville.
