Classes made up the purpose of Champaign Central. The aims were to educate high school students in academic and practical knowledge, and to prepare them for whatever life offered them, whether on the farm or in the city.

The facilities promote teaching and learning in every respect. Well-equipped Home Ec classes furnished sewing machines for promising seamstresses, and kitchens for male as well as female chefs. The Industrial Arts Department had opened its doors to females in all field choices. The proportion of male to female students wasn't exactly even in Plumbing and Refrigeration, but was rapidly increasing in classes such as Photography and Drafting. With the Fight to Read grant from the State of Illinois, the library was able to purchase some much-needed materials and equipment, and made it a better place for both students and teachers.

Both the new and the more experienced teachers contributed greatly to the learning environment strived for at Central. The new teachers brought in a fresh insight with new ideas to introduce, which the older teachers tempered with knowledge and common sense. Both these factors together created a better place for everyone at Central.

One important ingredient needed for classes was the student body itself. Without them, there would be no classes and no Champaign Central High School. The students were much like those of any other school, with the workers and the non-workers, the jocks and the brains, the socials and the nobodies. Every student offered some kind of knowledge or talent to share with others. It may have been a knowledge of film projectors, tape recorders, or repairing cars, or a talent for drawing, singing, or merely height, for reaching books off high shelves.

The object of the classes at Central was to provide students with more knowledge when they left than when they came. Everyone gained something from a time at Central, whether student or teacher, and each person gave as much as they received.

Title 7 Gives English Department a $5,000 Grant

Which department has

- A) a student advisory committee?
- B) a new reading skills program that is sponsored by a grant?
- C) and has three new teachers, one of which is the new head of the department?

If you didn't guess the English Department you obviously hadn't taken English. Changes were made including the head of the department, now Mrs. McGreal.

One new program in the English department was the student advisory committee. The committee was made up of four minority kids and four non-minority kids who tried to get information to others, also tried to think of improvements needed, and advised about needs of the school.

Another program was the New Reading Program which was sponsored by a federal grant. Mrs. McGreal and Mrs. Mocella helped kids improve their reading skills.

These were just a few of the many new projects and new programs going on in the English Department this year. If you didn't take English this year, or skipped, or slept through English everyday, you missed out on a lot.

← Mrs. McGreal looks over the new reading material used in the reading program taught by her and Mrs. Mocella.

↑ An attentive class takes a time reading of 450 words a minute in Mrs. Mocella's speed reading labs.

→ → Mike Corson and Doug Adams give a demonstrative speech on ball in Mr. Beck's Basic Communication class.

→ Junior Theresa Butts tries to keep two active children under control at the First United Methodist Day Care.

↑ Senior Linda Clacy and junior Theresa Butts play with the little kids at the First United Methodist Day Care.

Home Ec Adds Equipment; Cares for Children

The Energy Crisis curtailed a lot of field trips, but one department had more than one way to compensate for it. Some 270 people taking Home Ec classes this year didn't miss any field trips. Besides the usual classes offered, new classes like Child Care and Training gave Home Ec students a chance to take care of children outside of school. As a matter of fact, Child Development and Child Care classes accounted for one half of Home Ec enrollment.

New equipment, such as a dishwasher and an industrial sewing machine, the same kind as Cap and Gown used, and new projects like working with Project House and Interior Design classes were a change from what everybody thought Home Ec was!

Probably the most diverse of all departments, the physical education program offered 20 different sports for almost 1200 students. The boy's P. E. classes started the year with flag football, and went on to soccer, flicker ball, volleyball, basketball, weight lifting, and softball.

The girls' P. E. program offered more sports than the boys' program, partially because of more and better equipment. They started the year with flag football and tennis. Then they got into volleyball, swimming, basketball, gymnastics, golf, archery, fencing, folk dancing, and softball.

↑←← Joyce Phillips and Sherry Baker check their fencing distance before they begin the bout during 6th hour P.E.

←← Three unidentified boys try to gain control of the puck during an exciting game of field hockey for Boys' P.E.

← Fred Fliegel, senior, works out on the muscle building machine during fourth hour P. E. on the stage in the gym.

New Equipment, Books Ordered from $5,000 Grant

Eighty seething kids, milling around, bumping into each other, scraping chairs back and forth, giggling and whispering to one another, suddenly a distraught wild-eyed man stands up and screams "Quiet!". Is this some poor teacher having a nightmare?, some student teacher dreaming of things to come?, No, it's just another average day at the Champaign Central library.

Mr. Grace, the librarian, had a busy day beginning at 8:00 a.m. and ending at 4:30 p.m. Everything from light bulbs to books were selected and ordered by him. This year his job involves more thanks to a $5,000 grant won by the teachers. The library was then able to have a bigger and wider selection of books, equipment and records.

New equipment included two tape recorders, three 8mm cameras, three record players, a loop projector and a machine to make slides out of pictures. Books ordered are over a thousand, records three hundred.

Different factors help make the library a nicer place to be, including no homework.

Ads were a key element in the production of the Maroon. Their ads brought the money that provided a yearbook every spring. The advertisers offer many varied services that were stated in the ad space they purchased.

Money in the hands of high school students wields more power than they may have realized. Clothes were high on the shopping list of a fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, or eighteen year old, whether they were the blue jean and t-shirt type or the skirt and heels type. Most stores carried clothes for both these kinds of teenagers, so they didn't have to run over Champaign to find their type.

Next on the list for student purchases would have been cosmetics. This category held razor blades and hair coloring products, make-up and soap. Stores such as Robeson's carried a large line of make-up products with nearly every brand and available in stock. It could have been considered a one-stop shopping trip if a girl was hunting for a specific product and chose Robeson's for her first stop.

chose Robeson's for her first stop.

Probably at the top of the shopping list was food. Pizza was always a favorite, and Monical's was visited often after both football and basketball games. Everybody liked ice cream, especially in the spring, summer, and early fall, and Doble Dipski's was a good place to get cooled off.

Many students had money to spend for the first time when they got to Central, because it was the first time they were able to get a job other than babysitting or mowing lawns. Much of it was spent, but a good deal of it was saved at one of the many banks in Champaign-Urbana. A savings account gave a student a feeling of pleasure as he watched his interest grow, and a checking account would be used as a status symbol as well as an easier way to pay bills—unless, by chance, it became overdrawn!

Advertisers and money were a big part of the life of the student at Central, and a big part of life in the Maroon.

The people known, not known, liked, and not liked formed the basis of the three year stay at Champaign Central High School. Friends helped soften the shock of the first day at a school of 1308 students, 85 teachers, 5 administrators, 5 counselors, and 30 non-academic staff.

Everyone had doubts and worries about returning to school. Would the classes be harder? Would anyone notice the hair had grown (or been cut)? Was the tan obtained any deeper than anyone else's? Would Tom (or Sue) still feel the same way? All these questions came to mind at some time or another, and the answers depended on the people involved and the circumstances.

The people known were the girl across the room in Algebra II, the dizzy English teacher, and the principal who always spoke at assemblies. The people not known were the teachers everyone talked about, the senior guy who was "so-o cute" but was only seen on the football field, and the girl who was talked about behind her back and was only seen at a distance.

The people liked were obvious. Of course, the friend known since kindergarten, the guy or girl as an object of affection, and the teacher that everyone liked because he was so funny were all included. The people not liked were just as easy to list. Among these people were the girls who snubbed everyone but a certain select few, the strange guy who roamed the halls, and the teacher who never gave any study time at the end of class.

The people of Champaign and Central are really caught in the middle of a country existence and urban and suburban city life. Although modern buildings and impressive Broadway plays were examples of a very up-to-date place, nearly every well-traveled street would lead to its end in a distinctly rural setting. Many teachers from Central preferred to commute to and from school from area small towns rather than live in either Champaign or Urbana, while almost one quarter of the students ride buses to school. All these factors prove that all are Caught in the Middle.

could vary from "I thought it was fun" to "I thought it was a waste of time". Many seniors filled their time at school by joining clubs like Peppettes and Counseling Guides while others found it hard to even fill their schedules. Students who found school boring either took CCE or signed up to spend part of their time at home. The partial day program is a new program initiated this year where seniors could spend part of the day away from school although not necessarily at a job. Seventy-nine seniors decided to leave school altogether by graduating at mid-term.

Those who did stay around all year were hit by an epidemic of "Senioritis" in the spring. Hall roaming, class skipping and tardiness were all symptoms of this yearly disease. It seemed that all that was left for seniors to get excited about was yearbook distribution and graduation. In a sudden flood of sentimentality, it became important to have every possible person sign their yearbooks, even the ones whose name they never quite caught in Algebra class. These formed a memory called their "senior year".
